SPOTLIGHT: TEAM SOUTH

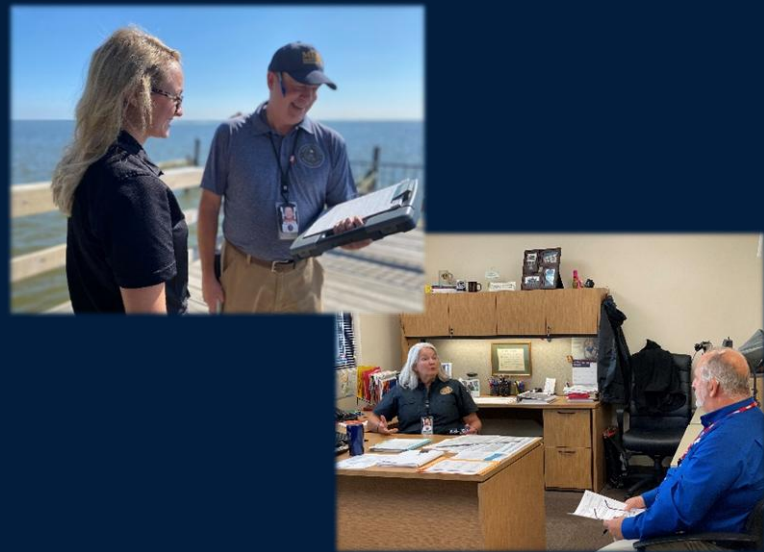

Based in Biloxi, MEMA's Southern Team consists of individuals most of us don't see on a daily basis, but they are indeed the unsung branch of the Mississippi Emergency Management Agency. Their team has played an integral role in the agency's day to day operations since 2007.

Following the devastation from Hurricane Katrina in 2005, there was an immediate need for additional MEMA employees, specifically along the coast, to aid in the long-term recovery of the area. The extent of the destruction following Hurricane Katrina ultimately prompted the creation of MEMA's Southern Team.

They continue to work Hurricane Katrina, which has remained an open disaster even 15 years after the storm made landfall. The rebuilding process is ongoing across the coast and the Southern Team oversees all infrastructure projects, such as road paving, that are still underway as a result of the 2005 hurricane.

Three additional disasters remain open that the team continues to work: Hurricane Nate, the February 2019 severe storm event and the April 2019 severe storm event.

Although the group has evolved throughout the years, their current team of fourteen describes themselves as a close-knit family with a range of experience and backgrounds. While each member of this cohesive group brings something valuable to the team, there are two things they each share: a commitment to MEMA and a love for the place they call home, the beautiful Mississippi Gulf Coast.
